

Jill Seigmund grew up in Great Falls, some of the best days of her childhood spent camping and fishing with her family on the East Side. In high school she discovered hiking and backpacking in the Bob Marshall Wilderness. As a student at the University of Montana, she bought her first mountain bike and cross-country skis and was officially hooked on spending long hours on the trail with friends and canine companions.

A resident of the Flathead Valley since 1996, Jill has been involved with several community organizations over the years, including Montana Wilderness Association, The Glacier Institute, Literacy Volunteers, the Nonprofit Development Partnership, and the Nurturing Center. She has served as the Program Director for Leadership Flathead since 2004. She has a passion for connecting people and building resources to make the Flathead Valley the best it can be for all of its residents.

Jill and her husband Pete are the parents of two young sons, who are enjoying learning about the pleasures of the outdoor world. The couple feels that the development of various new trail systems throughout the Flathead Valley makes this an ideal place to raise their family, and they look forward to helping secure permanent public access to the Foy's to Blacktail Trails for their children and future generations.
